THE LITTLE WOMAN

"See how easy it is to conserve gasoline. It's not hurting us a bit to walk next door."

Bridge

by Alfred Sheinwald

"How can man die better than facing fearful odds?" asked Horatius at the bridge table. He should have tried to live better by facing favorable odds.

The average player tries the spade finesse in today's hand. This loses, and South eventually gives up a club.

South can develop a diamond trick, but only if he gives up the spade finesse. The finesse is only an even chance, but the odds are 5 to 3 in favor of a good break in diamonds.

South leads a diamond to the ace, ruffs a diamond high and leads a low trump. West takes the king of spades and leads a club to the king. South ruffs another diamond high and leads a low trump to dummy's nine.

South can now ruff a third diamond. He gets to dummy with the ace of clubs and discards his last club on the established seven of diamonds.

That's how Horatius should have played bridge in the brave days of old.

DAILY QUESTION: After two passes, your partner opens with one club, and the next player passes. You hold: Spades-K 6 3; Hearts-Q J 10 7; Diamonds-K J 8; and Clubs-Q 5 2. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two notrump. You would be a trifle light for this forcing response if you hadn't already passed. Since you have actually passed, your response is merely invitational and promises only about 11 or 12 points.
